FULFILLING AMERICA’S GLOBAL ROLE

Launched in 1925 to enhance America’s wisdom in its new role as a global power, the Institute of Current World Affairs has identified and cultivated experts in foreign affairs for nearly a century.

ICWA transforms the lives and careers of emerging writers, academics, lawyers and diplomats, as well as experts in finance, policy and social activism. We seek out young people of high intelligence and promise, free them from the routines of their professional lives for two years, and give them the time and resources to immerse themselves in other cultures.

Fellows travel, research and write, free of ties to governments or business, and go on to inform the public debate, fulfilling the institute’s mission of nurturing a living endowment of wisdom and detached judgment.

CRUCIAL MISSION IN A CHANGING WORLD

When the institute was founded more than nine decades ago, the United States had little knowledge about Asia, Africa and other parts of the world where the old great powers boasted centuries of on-the-ground experience.

Now each day brings a torrent of facts from a globalized world. But the resulting sea of information hardly makes us more informed, let alone better thinkers or more enlightened actors. That’s why the ICWA fellowship is just as valuable as when it was conceived.

We search for critical thinkers who develop insight, vision and new ways of perceiving the world. ICWA nurtures the kind of deep understanding of international affairs future generations will need to ensure America’s role in the world is informed by wisdom, foresight and compassion.

A CENTURY OF DEVELOPING FOREIGN AFFAIRS EXPERTISE

ICWA has always done its work quietly, individual by individual. Our more than 170 fellows include:

John Hazard (USSR, 1934-1940) was a young Harvard Law School graduate when he traveled to the Soviet Union in 1934 to study Soviet law. Back in the United States, he went on to help found Columbia University’s Russian Institute (now the Harriman Institute), and become one of this country’s most distinguished professors of international law.

Doak Barnett (China, 1947-1955) carried out his first intensive study of Chinese culture and politics as an ICWA fellow in the 1940s. He went on to become one of the most prolific writers about China at the Brookings Institution, and Columbia and Johns Hopkins universities. But he was best known for his work behind the scenes in Washington encouraging both Lyndon Johnson and Richard Nixon to end China’s isolation before the country’s opening in 1972.

George Antonius (Near East, 1930-1942) wrote the seminal book The Arab Awakening. Smith Hempstone (Africa, 1956-1960) became a distinguished journalist, author and US ambassador to Kenya whose constant pressure for democracy on President Daniel arap Moi helped lead to multi-party elections. And Philips Talbott (India and Pakistan, 1938-1941/1946-1950) was appointed by President Kennedy as assistant secretary of state for Near Eastern and South Asian affairs. He went on to become ambassador to Greece, president of the Asia Society in New York and Asia specialist for the Aspen Institute and other organizations.

Matthew Chitwood (China, 2017-2019) reporting on how infrastructure development in rural Yunnan Province is transforming its people, land, economy and governance

Jessica Reilly (Seafaring, 2015-2017) studied the effects of climate change on coastal communities in Mexico and Central America.
